

HOME FRONT LEGACY 1914-18

A UK-WIDE PROJECT HELPING COMMUNITIES RECORD AND MAP OUR FIRST WORLD WAR SITES, COORDINATED BY THE COUNCIL FOR BRITISH ARCHAEOLOGY

The project aims to uncover the often moving and inspiring local stories that bring the places associated with the Great War and its Home Front to life.

By recording this knowledge and their observations, local people can expand our local and national records and influence future protection for vulnerable sites and buildings.

A web resource area with a site recording toolkit helps volunteers to record sites, structures and buildings and publish their data in the Historic Environment Records and National Monuments Records held by local authorities and national agencies across the UK.

This community research comes together in an online map of sites and projects on the website for everyone to access and as a legacy for future generations.

The CBA is encouraging heritage bodies, centenary and community projects to record the surviving remains of First World War places across Britain, and open up our knowledge of the Home Front, then and now.

Across the 2014-18 centenary, we are looking for the remains of practice trenches and locating training camps, seeing how many drill halls and munitions factories survive, identifying military hospitals and finding the very first pill boxes.

Locate and record your site step-by-step with our online form or mobile app

REGISTER NOW!

- Site recording toolkit with step-by-step instructions to recording WWI sites and buildings
- Mobile and tablet app and online recording form
- Guidance on working with Historic Environment Records and National Monument Records
- Advice from your Local Historic Environment service on projects and sites in your area
- Register now for one of our day schools. Details overleaf or see our website...
www.homefrontlegacy.org.uk

-  flickr/homefrontlegacy
-  /homefrontlegacy
-  @homefrontlegacy

